

THE BEATRICE HAVENER'S MISFORTUNE.

She Runs Down a Schooner and Later Dies.

The American bark Havener, forty-five days from Ilo Janio, came into port late on Friday night in charge of her first Captain, Daniel Regan, J. W. Havener, her Captain and owner, died on the voyage up. Mate Regan said he found the Captain on the morning of March 1 dead, in his berth with his two little children sleeping quietly by the dead man's side. Captain Havener had been ill the day before, but was better when he retired at midnight. The mate thought that heart disease was the cause of death, but it was buried at sea. The Captain's wife and two little children were sent here by steamer.

The two little orphans will live in Scarsdale, New York, with their grandmother, Mrs. Havener, who was a well-known old ship master, and had been in command of different vessels for a number of years.

On April 10, the Havener ran into the schooner A. Merritt off Cape Hatteras, cutting her down to the water's edge. Her crew was rescued and brought ashore.

The Havener was free, the mate says, and heading northward when she sighted the schooner's lights, which now showed red and now green, on the starboard tack, heading across the Havener's bows. The latter's helm was put down, but it was too late, and the Havener struck the A. Merritt forward. The Havener was sinking, and so the crew set fire to her. The A. Merritt was bound from Philadelphia to St. Andrews, Scotland, via Lough Foyle, and was built in Philadelphia in 1875.

A Bride of Two Weeks Elopement With a Former Lover.

BESSEYVILLE, Pa., April 11.—Susie Crownell, 18, daughter of Capt. Leo Crownell, an oil barge skipper, was to have married Dr. George House, at this place, one year ago. A week before the wedding was to have come off the Doctor went away on a business trip and did not return. What became of him nobody knew. Six months ago Miss Crownell began to receive the attentions of Lester Stout, a well-to-do young man living in a neighboring village, and it was they who were married. Dr. House returned to Besseyville suddenly as he had disappeared. No one knew where he had been or what kept him away. But his reasons for going still remain unknown. It was satisfactory to the young woman that he was to have married for ever. Friday she closed with him. The runabout pair were happy in Besseyville, but the parties all thought them to be lost. The parties are prominent socially, and wealthy. She is a handsome girl, born in Besseyville, and educated there. Her mother was a Cuban, and eloped with Capt. Crownell from New Orleans and married him twenty years ago, fitting a wealthy Cuban lover.
